If you learn that a University member has experienced sexual misconduct:

CARE

Care for the University member by listening, showing empathy, and avoiding comments that suggest fault or doubt.

CONNECT

Connect the University member to resources.

Address any immediate health or safety issues, including by offering to accompany the individual to a campus resource office.

Explain that, as a University employee, you must share information about possible sexual misconduct with EOAA, which is the University office that responds to sexual misconduct concerns.

CALL

Call EOAA to share information. Your required reporting of sexual misconduct to EOAA will help ensure that any time the University learns about sexual misconduct, it reaches out to the impacted individual to offer them support, accommodations and the opportunity to initiate an investigation.

What does EOAA do when it receives a sexual misconduct report?

- An EOAA staff member will reach out to the impacted person in an email to provide information about the available resources for personal support and accommodations, as well as options for investigation.
- The EOAA staff member will invite the impacted person to contact EOAA if they want to learn more about initiating an investigation.
- EOAA does not require the impacted person to respond. It is up to the impacted person whether they want to meet with EOAA or respond to EOAA's email.
- EOAA will not share the impacted person's information or initiate an investigation unless the impacted person wants this, except where there may be a significant danger to campus safety or where an employee may have engaged in sexual misconduct. In these cases, EOAA will only act as necessary to respond to the reported sexual misconduct.

When do you need to report?

When you learn about possible sexual assault, stalking and relationship violence that is directed at any University member, or sexual harassment that is directed at a student, in the course of performing your employment duties and it may have:

- occurred on University property;
- occurred during a University program or activity;
- been directed at a current University member while they were a University member; or
- been committed by a current University member while they were a University member.

What do you need to report?

You do not need to ask for any information from a University member who tells you about sexual misconduct. However, to the extent known to you, you must tell EOAA all relevant details that you have learned that the University would need to determine what occurred and address the situation.

How do you report?

Call an EOAA staff member at (612) 624-9547 or submit a written report at diversity.umn.edu/eoaa.

Possible accommodations include:

- residence modifications;

- support and counseling;
- work schedule or location modifications;

Possible protective measures include:

- no-contact directives that prohibit complainants and respondents from contacting one another; and
- increased monitoring or supervision at locations or activities where the prohibited conduct occurred.

Be Proactive:

Inform University members in advance that you are not a confidential resource.

Where possible, at the outset of a formal relationship with students or employees, employees should share that they are required to report sexual misconduct to the campus Title IX office. For example, faculty may include a statement on their syllabus. For a sample syllabus statement, see: diversity.umn.edu/eoaa/.

Having this information will allow impacted persons to make informed decisions about whether to share information about sexual misconduct with a confidential resource or an employee with a reporting obligation.

If a University member tells you about an experience of sexual misconduct before you are able to inform them of your reporting requirement, let them know that you must share information with EOAA and let them know about the confidential resources listed here.
